QUESTIONS & ANSWERS ON STATE AND LOCAL VARIATIONS ON THE SEC PAY-TO-PLAY RULE

By Diane E. Ambler, Cary J. Meer and Ruth E. Delaney

Many states and municipalities have adopted laws and regulations that affect how investment managers may solicit investment advisory business, including investment in sponsored public and private funds, from the state agencies and municipalities that administer employee benefit plans and other state investment vehicles. This Q&A seeks to highlight some of the issues relating to soliciting business from, or doing business with, these instrumentalities and also seeks to explain some of the important differences between state and local laws and the SEC's pay-to-play rule under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, Rule 206(4)-5.

Q1: We are an SEC-registered investment adviser and comply with the SEC pay-to-play rule. If we comply with the SEC rule, must we also comply with state and municipal laws relating to pay-to-play?

A1: Yes; the SEC pay-to-play rule does not preempt federal, state and local pay-to-play, lobbying and related requirements, and there are significant restrictions imposed by the federal government, states, municipalities, governmental pension plans and other authorities that often exceed SEC requirements.

Q2: Who is restricted under state laws from making political contributions? Are they the same persons that fall within the definition of Covered Associates under the SEC rule?

A2: There is no uniformity among jurisdictions as to who is covered by pay-to-play or similar restrictions against seeking to obtain government business by making campaign or other contributions to elected officials. Some state restrictions are more expansive than the SEC rule and may include, in addition to employees who solicit government entities, affiliates and third-party solicitors and marketers.

Q3: We have heard that the SEC exception from the two-year time-out look-back (to only a six-month look-back for a natural person who joins an adviser and does not solicit clients for that adviser) and the natural person de minimis dollar contribution exception (of $350 per election to any one official for whom a person is entitled to vote or $150 to other officials) may be different in various states; is that right?

A3: Yes; these exemptions may not be available or may vary widely in detail, depending on the jurisdiction. For example:

- Connecticut looks back to the beginning of the previous election cycle – which, until the 2018 election, means a look-back to January 2011 – with no de minimis exemption with respect to contributions to candidates for state treasurer.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS ON STATE AND LOCAL VARIATIONS ON THE SEC PAY-TO-PLAY RULE

Q4: What types of contributions are restricted under state laws?

A4: Many state statutes and regulations are far more restrictive than the SEC rule (which applies to any gifts or other contributions of value made for the purpose of influencing any election for federal, state or local office). For example:

- Types of gifts covered –
 - Trustees, investment officers and employees in a position of investment discretion over a state retirement system are often prohibited from soliciting or accepting anything of value, including reimbursement of expenses, meals, entertainment and the like, and state statutes may contain detailed descriptions of what may or may not be included.
 - In many states, violation of gift statutes is a crime for both the recipient and the donor.
 - Many states have de minimis (i.e., less than $50; in some cases, less than $10) exceptions to gift prohibitions; some states have no de minimis exception. For example, In New York City, the Comptroller has implemented a policy prohibiting employees of the Comptroller's Office from accepting any gifts (including, but not limited to, meals and entertainment, loans, travel, hospitality or any other thing) whatsoever from any person or firm doing business or seeking to do business with the City.
- Purpose of contribution –
 - State laws typically prohibit contributions made for any purpose (not only for the purpose of influencing an election).

Q5: What individuals in government entities are restricted from receiving gifts or contributions under state laws?

A5: Once again, state laws vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction and also vary from the SEC rule (which applies to any person – or that person's election committee – who is at the time of the contribution an incumbent, a candidate or a successful candidate for elective office directly or indirectly responsible for, or influential over, the hiring of an adviser, or with authority to appoint a person with that authority). For example:

- New Jersey regulates contributions to any candidate for governor or for a seat in the legislature, certain local officials and political parties in New Jersey.
- Connecticut restricts contributions to any exploratory, candidate or political committee established by, or supporting or authorized to support, certain candidates for state office or a party committee (including a state central committee as well as town committees).
- Maryland requires disclosure of contributions to any state employee or official and any campaign finance committee that promotes the success or defeat of a candidate or political party and also covers such contributions that are related to a public question.

Q6: How do state laws restrict the activities of solicitors and placement agents?

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS ON STATE AND LOCAL VARIATIONS ON THE SEC PAY-TO-PLAY RULE

A6: States and other jurisdictions restrict activities related to the hiring of third-party placement agents (regardless of the SEC rule's permitted use of certain registered solicitors) in various manners. In addition, certain plans may also adopt their own policies that go beyond the scope of any statutory restrictions. Examples include the following:

- Certain states prohibit paying any contingency fee in connection with investments by a public investment fund with an investment manager or in the manager's funds.
- Prohibitions usually apply to payments of contingency fees to third-party placement agents and may also apply to contingency fees paid to employees (in some cases, regardless of whether such employees are required to register as "lobbyists" in such state or locality).
- Non-contingent performance bonuses to employees may be permitted in some circumstances; for example, if a bonus is based upon the performance of the investment advisory firm as a whole and is not contingent upon the award of business by a state or local plan.
- Violation of a contingency fee prohibition could be a felony in certain states.
- Effective June 9, 2014, all five of the New York City Retirement Systems ("NYC Systems") passed a resolution banning the use of use of placement agents across all investment classes.
- In addition, a private fund manager must disclose any placement agent fees paid in connection with securing commitments by other investors in a fund in which any of the NYC Systems invests.
- New York's governor has announced a permanent ban on the use of all placement agents, including in connection with investments by its largest retirement system, whether compensated on a flat fee, a contingent fee or any other basis.
- In February 2017, the Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania issued a directive prohibiting investment managers from using third-party placement agents for funds managed on behalf of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Treasury Department.

Q7: Is it true that our investment management activities could be considered lobbying under state law?

A7: Yes; certain activities related to contracting with a government entity for providing investment management services (or investing in a fund sponsored by the investment manager) may trigger state lobbyist registration considerations. For example:

- Many states have adopted lobbying laws that require individuals and entities who work for third-party placement agents, as well as certain employees of hedge fund managers, hedge funds, investment advisers and other investment managers, to register with those states as lobbyists.
- In these states, sales staff of third parties, as well as in-house sales and marketing personnel, are the most likely to be required to register.
- Ohio and California are among the states requiring lobbyist registration for investment management professionals, in certain circumstances.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS ON STATE AND LOCAL VARIATIONS ON THE SEC PAY-TO-PLAY RULE

- Examples of activities triggering lobbyist registration –
 - Ohio
 - “Lobbyist,” in connection with a state retirement system, is defined as a person or entity whose main purpose on a “regular and substantial basis” is to influence the system’s decisions by direct communications with board members, investment officials or any employee whose position involves substantial and material exercise of investment discretion.
 - California
 - Any placement agent (finders, solicitors, marketers, consultants, brokers or other intermediaries), including internal sales or marketing personnel that influence state pension plan investments, must register as a lobbyist, with limited exceptions.

Q8: If lobbyist registration is required, who is required to register?

A8: If registration is required, the person or entity required to register varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. For example, in some cases, the marketing employee who lobbies on behalf of an investment manager is required to register as a lobbyist, while in other cases, the investment manager entity registers as a lobbyist and may be required to list marketing employees who lobby on behalf of the investment manager on the investment manager’s registration statement.

Q9: Are there common exemptions from state lobbying registration requirements that we might rely on?

A9: Yes; if a state requires an investment manager or placement agent to register as a lobbyist in order to solicit business from a state agency or plan, they may also provide for exemptions. Common exemptions from registration as a lobbyist that exist in some states include the following:

- De minimis exemptions are fairly common where an individual has not been compensated for his or her lobbying activities, and has not expended funds on such lobbying activities, above set thresholds. De minimis thresholds vary significantly from state to state.
- De minimis exceptions may apply in some states when an individual spends only a minimal amount of his or her time on lobbying activities.
- Participation in a state competitive bid and/or request for proposal process may be an exempted activity.

Q10: What are the consequences of registering with a state as a lobbyist?

A10: Common requirements that apply to state registered lobbyists include the following:

- Ongoing reporting requirements for individual lobbyists and their employers.
- Ethics training.
- Prohibition on contingency fees (i.e., based on an award of an advisory contract or an investment in a fund) in some states.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS ON STATE AND LOCAL VARIATIONS ON THE SEC PAY-TO-PLAY RULE

- Filing of a written placement agent and/or lobbyist agreement (or summary of such an agreement, if oral).
- Payment of registration fees.
- Reporting of information such as compensation, lobbying expenditures, gifts and entertainment to public officials or political contributions.

Q11: What are the consequences of failing to register with a state as a lobbyist?

A11: Potential consequences may include:

- Possible cancellation of the contract between the investment manager and the state entity.
- Failure to comply with a state or municipal lobbying statute can result in a fine and, in some cases, may rise to a misdemeanor.
- Possibly triggering “bad actor” disqualification:
 - Pursuant to the Dodd-Frank Act, the SEC adopted rules under Regulation D of the Securities Act that disqualify certain bad actors from relying on the Rule 506 safe harbor exemption from Securities Act registration.
 - A criminal conviction for failure to comply with state or local lobbying laws could be considered a “disqualifying event” for purposes of the SEC’s rules, resulting in treatment as a “bad actor” for purposes of the Regulation D Rule 506 exemption.

Q12: Are there any additional state and/or plan-specific disclosure requirements?

A12: Yes; state disclosure requirements are often broader than those under the SEC pay-to-play rule. Also, specific plans may have adopted their own policies in addition to any applicable state-level requirements. Investment managers doing business or seeking to do business with state plans may be required to make disclosures to state boards of ethics or state elections enforcement commissions or other agencies, in addition to making disclosures to the plans with whom they wish to do business, and the information disclosed may be publicly available (for example, posted online) in some circumstances.

Q13: Where and/or how do we find the applicable state laws or a particular plan’s policies?

A13: Applicable requirements appear in state and local statutes and regulations and often include formal and informal positions taken by municipalities, cities, counties and the state or local pension plans themselves. Sometimes positions appear in minutes of meetings of public officials or standardized contractual provisions or may only be clarified by direct communications with governing bodies. Many of these laws are in a state of flux and are subject to change.

Q14: What are some of the steps we should take to be sure we are in compliance?

A14: Affirmative steps should be taken to monitor and achieve compliance with the various state and local requirements concerning lobbyist registration (including for internal marketing activities), placement agent use, political contributions and gifts and entertainment, including the following:

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS ON STATE AND LOCAL VARIATIONS ON THE SEC PAY-TO-PLAY RULE

- Before accepting an engagement with any government entity, determine what laws, policies and disclosures apply to such an engagement, and whether current preclearance requests for political contributions, if approved, or any prior political contributions would preclude such engagement.
- Prior to hiring new employees, require disclosure of all political contributions and gifts and entertainment provided to state and local government officials.
- Identify the permissible political contribution and gift and entertainment thresholds applicable to your business and do not approve any political contributions or gifts and entertainment exceeding applicable thresholds.
- Update policies and procedures to require preclearance of all political contributions and gifts and entertainment, and do not approve any gifts and entertainment above a de minimis amount, which could be $0, depending on an investment manager’s clientele.
- Review and update recordkeeping policies as necessary.
- Before marketing to a state or local plan, determine whether registration as a lobbyist and/or lobbyist employer is required.
- Prior to engaging a placement agent to contact a particular state or local plan on your behalf, confirm that the use of placement agents or payment of fees to placement agents is not prohibited by state or local law or by a plan’s own policies.

Q15: Has information already been compiled setting forth the requirements relating to various state and local plans?
